

Participation in International Collaboration on Gathering and Measuring Data for the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs)

Lincoln University College (LUC), Malaysia, actively participates in international collaborations focused on data collection, measurement, and research aligned with the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs). The university contributes to both academic and applied projects that enhance global understanding of SDG indicators — particularly in areas of education quality, health promotion, gender equality, and environmental sustainability.

This report outlines LUC's institutional mechanisms, research partnerships, data-driven initiatives, and international engagements that support SDG data gathering, benchmarking, and monitoring at both national and regional levels.

National and Regional Data Contributions

Malaysian SDG Data Network Participation

LUC participates in national SDG data workshops and policy dialogues coordinated by the Department of Statistics Malaysia (DOSM) and Ministry of Higher Education (MOHE) to align institutional indicators with national reporting mechanisms.

Data Sharing through Government and NGO Partnerships

Data from LUC's community projects — particularly on health education and rural women's empowerment — are shared with NGOs and government bodies contributing to SDG monitoring reports at the regional level.

Research and Data Measurement Activities

SDG-Linked Research Projects

Examples include:

“Community Health Outcomes and SDG 3 Monitoring in ASEAN Rural Areas” (collaborative project with regional universities).

“Data-Driven Approaches to Assessing Quality Education (SDG 4) in Southeast Asia” — involving survey-based data collection across partner institutions.

Data Analytics and Capacity Building

The Faculty of Computer Science and Multimedia conducts workshops on data analytics for sustainability, training students and professionals in data visualization, impact assessment, and SDG metric interpretation.

The university also integrates data-driven learning modules in research methodology courses, building institutional expertise in SDG data gathering.
